

Drug prevention Article

Have you ever wanted to try drugs? You've probably at least wondered at some point in your life how drugs feel and affect people. And that's why I'm writing this article, about my experience.

One evening I went to a party that my friend was hosting. Me and my friends wanted to celebrate Homecoming. Everything was going fine until we saw our other friend nodding and falling asleep. So we took her upon our shoulders and took her to the car. In the car she was no longer talking with us, and we started realizing that she may be dying. We wanted to take her to the hospital, but we were afraid we would get arrested so we dropped her off at the hospital and drove away.

I feel horrible for what I have done, because maybe if I had thought straight that night, I would have helped my friend get to the hospital and she could live right now. Also, me and my friends could have done some research and therefore we would have known how much of which substance our body can handle or which substances cannot be taken together and prevent our friend from dying. Also we should have realized that taking any kind of pill and then going drinking is a terrible idea.

In the future I want to spread information about teenage drug abuse in order to prevent something similar from happening. Additionally, I never want to end up on a party like this where my friends lose their life.

In conclusion, the tragic loss of lives due to drug abuse is a strong reminder of the dangers lurking in our society
