

The majestic plastic bottle

A rare creature in the earth's ecosystem is slowly going extinct. Today we're going to look at its life and spectate its behavior in its natural habitat.

The plastic bottle's life in nature starts off more tragically than most other species'. Its insides are drained and its body is deformed by the apex predators called humans. These humans then allow the bottle to fulfill its journey to the pacific by letting the bottle go. Uncertain in its first days on earth, the plastic bottle wanders the streets of cityies serving as cushioning for cars, creating a protective layer for the green grass, even being used as shoes by the humans. The plastic bottle gets closer to its paradise every day of its existence and because of its thousand-year-long deterioration the plastic bottle makes sure it will get to its destination.

After being picked up by the wind the bottle lands in the waters in the near cities and because of its closed insides having pockets of air, the plastic bottle is a great swimmer. The moment it touches a river or any kind of ocean it nows it has won. The waters flush the bottles away straight to the pacific garbage patch joining its comrades and completing its journey through the harsh environments of the earth.
