

The plastic bottle- just another endangered species

Probably every one of us uses a plastic bottle every day. Whether we buy bottled water or shampoo in a plastic bottle. But have you ever wondered how you hurt plastic bottles, how they suffer and are almost on the verge of extinction? It's scary! Just imagine how you would feel if someone used you callously and then crumpled you up and threw you in the trash, then melt you down and made just another product that someone will mercilessly misuse.

And what about the idea of throwing you somewhere on the street and ending up in the ocean, for example, with those insanely dangerous creatures, which want to eat you? Today, 150 million tons of plastic, so many poor plastic bottles, float in the oceans. A complete nightmare, which gives one goosebumps. Depending on how people treat them, it is estimated that there should be more plastic bottles than fish in the sea by the year 2050. So hopefully they will win over them!

We have to do something fast to defeat those stupid people! Support plastic bottles, buy only bottled water. It is essential not to recycle them!
